Planning Commission Representative,

I am inquiring about the recent decision to re-zone the El Dorado Hills Town Center Condominiums to high density apartments. I am perplexed as to the decision. While EID has notified El Dorado County residents of significant drought conditions and implemented mandatory water restriction requirements, the planning commission has approved the re-zoning of lower density housing to high density apartments. This does not make any sense.

While 80 percent of California struggles with severe drought conditions, the prospect for future and increasing drought conditions seems high. Re-zoning of land such as in El Dorado Town Center and pressure from developers in El Dorado County to build is concerning.

I want to protect our water resources, the small farmers of El Dorado County and the rural environment.
